How Good Are TV's News Analysts?

Our expert judges the writing, thinking and delivery of the network commentators

By Larry L. King

Except for not working in ink-stained obscurity, television's network "commentators" or "analysts"—George Will of ABC, Bill Moyers of CBS, John Chancellor of NBC—serve a function somewhere between the opinionated print columnist and the newspaper editorialist.

They offer a personal point of view outside that traditional objective journalism, which, theoretically, presents the mere who-where-what-why-when of straight news. They are free to rare back and bellow whatever wisdom or nonsense currently afflicts them. For this we should be almost pathetically grateful: it otherwise often is difficult to tell network Tweedledum from network Tweedledee.

No matter how many electronic beeps, bugles or twirling globes may announce each network's news, I find that Sam Donaldson, Lesley Stahl and Chris Wallace sound pretty much the same when informing that the President and the Soviet leader have absolutely nothing to say publicly of what they've been whispering to each other in Geneva, or that one wore an overcoat while the other did not. That network correspondents are so handsomely paid for uttering approximately that which their counterparts are also uttering leads to quasi-philosophical musings about the values held in TV land—until one realizes they probably are being paid for the boredom they must suffer, and have a duty, apparently, to pass on to the rest of us.

If there often seems a deadly sameness to network news, it is not, I think, because the networks may be part of some insidious leftist conspiracy—as alleged by such chronic media bashers as Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) or cable-television mogul Ted Turner—but because of pack journalism instincts complicated by slickly executed "media events," timid news management and an overall lack of imaginative daring. If CBS rushes its name correspondents to the Middle East to cover the latest hijacking, can ABC and NBC afford to be far behind? Where volcano ash and lava go, three network camera crews goeth also. Let a handcuffed spy be led by a posse of trenchcoats toward the paddy wagon and three network microphones are certain to be poked into his or her troubled face. Should Margaret Thatcher visit the White House, you'll see a covey of familiar correspondents in their varied network silks restrained by the same velvet rope as they scream their questions toward conveniently deaf ears. No wonder networks place such stock in their revered, richly paid anchormen: except for them—and their analysts—everything else is so much alike viewers might have trouble selecting a winner in the ratings sweeps.

Network executives—including the news chiefs—long ago learned that deviations can be troublesome, if not downright dangerous. If Senator Helms, Turner or other malcontents are displeased by the way the news is presented, they might try to seize the network and purify it to their superior standards. As CBS-TV → recently learned, this can cost big money as well as blood, sweat and tears. Given the many partisan politicians and rigid ideologues with their various axes to grind, how a network plays its stories—as well as what it plays—is a constant invitation to trouble. Television bigwigs feel about trouble the way I feel about asparagus and cauliflower: they'd druther not have any.

That being the case, how is it that network commentators seem to arouse less ire than the beleaguered anchormen? I have heard Dan Rather subjected to much more dinner party and barroom abuse than is heaped on Bill Moyers—though it is Moyers who holds the CBS license to agitate. Evidently most viewers—ideologues, politicians and hopeless cretins aside—allow for commentator wind without worrying much about the direction whence it blows. Which leads to the question of whether these designated network analysts are as influential as they hope. To what purpose do they pontificate if people say, "Oh, well, that's just some more of ol' Bill's"—or ol' George's or ol' John's—"personal chin music," and then go about their business uninfluenced?

Most of the Big Three's commentaries are—and are meant to be—political. In discussing public issues or the acts or personalities of public men, they almost automatically land in one or another partisan camp. Each of them had earlier pitched his personal tent in the political camp of his choice outside of television. Bill Moyers was press secretary to LBJ; John Chancellor was appointed by President Johnson to head the Voice of America; George Will was a staffer for a conservative Republican senator and of late was caught—and criticized for—helping prepare President Reagan for a debate with Jimmy Carter. Their prior histories pretty much match the slants of their television commentaries.

Even a viewer knowing nothing of their past political affiliations would have little more difficulty placing Moyers and Will—ideologically—than in tracking a bleeding elephant through the snow. Chancellor's politics do not so obviously announce themselves, perhaps because he is so brisk and matter-of-fact one feels he is more concerned with getting home to supper than in making converts.

Moyers, once an ordained minister, comes across the tube as a preacher of the social gospel—a do-gooder, even a bleeding heart, the kind of fellow Moral Majoritarians like to call a "humanist" in tones somehow making that entirely respectable word parade as a pejorative.

Will stands over there on the far right—not the nut right, no; not the bomb-squad and know-nothing right. But rightward enough that one has little trouble imagining him agreeing with Marie Antoinette about the people and cake. (George probably wouldn't want her to get the State involved in delivering it, however. If they wanta eat cake—by George—at least make them come get it.)

Chancellor belongs left of center, though not far enough across the line to cause many head-on crashes. If we are in for the occasional ideological surprise among network commentators, he likely will spring it. One gets from Chancellor a kind of hardheaded rationality, a common-sense approach appearing tougher when his scripts are read than when his galloping, air-gulping delivery is viewed.

Moyers, then, patiently preaches to us and hopes—may actually believe—that we will in time respond to our better instincts. Chancellor stubbornly hectors us, though probably skeptical of the end results. Will sternly corrects our misguided thinking, though he may harbor doubts as to whether we possess the wisdom to see the light.

One must give the clear nod to George Will, however, in the matter of effective theatrics. He has the largest sense of drama. Will issues pronouncements and edicts with all the certainty of the Pope. Even should you not agree with him—and I agree with Will about as often as snow blankets Miami Beach—his manner has a way of compelling attention. Probably if the Big Three analysts read to us from the Pittsburgh phone book, only →

Will could make it sound as if he were declaring policies vital to the preservation of Western civilization.

Chancellor is the old soldier of the Big Three, the veteran of the most wars as a field correspondent and a former anchorman. He seems to have a rather old-fashioned disdain for theatrical flair. He sees himself in the news business rather than in show business. While that is an admirable view, I fear it increasingly becomes a less than accurate one. One of these days, I half suspect, network television newscasts may be announced by singing jingles if not by tap-dancing anchormen. That fear is perhaps fed by exposure to too many local television newscasts, replete with inane "happy talk" and booming voices labeling even the scurviest "news team" as "award winning" or better.

Moyers, as an on-screen "talking head," theatrically ranks several paces behind Will and a good 20 yards ahead of Chancellor. He seems to sense a need for more drama, as he often illustrates his commentary with footage or sound effects. This may brighten the moment visually or dramatically, but it also runs the risk of confusing viewers as to what is commentary and what is straight news. Still, a couple of Moyers' more effective moments came when pictures supplemented his series of commentaries on African famine, and when his camera zeroed in on suddenly shy lobbyists caught ponying up big bucks for influential congressmen whose votes control the destiny of their benefactors. Moyers seems more dramatically effective in other television formats—as an interviewer, where he is superb at extracting information, or as a narrator of documentaries—than as a talking-head commentator. He's a good writer, though his poetry shines best when assisted by pictures. His voice and manner make him appear so reasonable, so sincere, that should he choose to become a propagandist he'd doubtless be the best of the three.

Perhaps because he makes fewer appearances as an analyst than do his counterparts (in the first 10 months of '85 Moyers was in that role but 18 times, compared to 41 for Will and 72 for Chancellor), Moyers' areas of concern appear easier to peg. These are world hunger, peace and/or disarmament and civil liberties. And he offers fewer surprises—to me, at least—than does George Will.

I blinked on hearing Will defend the oft-pilloried American farmer: "Yes, price supports are expensive. In recent years they've been the fastest growing major entitlement program. But look what we're getting for that. Three per cent of the American public is feeding the other 97 per cent of us and a good bit of the rest of the world as well. The farmers are feeding us so cheaply that we're spending an incredibly small percentage of our disposable income on our food. And furthermore, agricultural exports are keeping us from going absolutely off the brink with our trade deficits." Another slight surprise: "It's a mystery to me why so many conservative American businessmen complain about American unions. The principal effect of American unions has been to increase the purchasing power of American men and women. They buy what conservative American businessmen are selling." I also would have assumed Will to be strongly for prayer in the schools, but he does not clamor for it, because "any prayer acceptable to all American families, Baptists and Buddhists will not be prayer. It will be bland, rhetorical mush . . . instant freeze-dried religion." And would you believe that he would chase American oil companies out of Libya—"by . . . a law if necessary"—to show that we mean business against terrorists and ain't gonna take it no more? Imagine George Will taking a big stick to big business!

Before you conclude that Will has gone over to the Democrats or Marxists, however, be comforted that the one time he congratulated Walter Mondale was for Mondale's tough, anti-Soviet statements; that he objects to economic boycotts against South Africa; that our invasion of Grenada did not prove "America is → back and standing tall . . . as a superpower" but that to the contrary "the United States is basically a regional power, unwilling to commit its power unless success can be very quick and very bloodless." And I know of nobody in the Pentagon—Caspar Weinberger or general—more enthusiastic than Will when it comes to big military spending: "If you get housing subsidies wrong or art subsidies wrong you can come back the next year and make it up. If you get defense wrong you can lose your country."

NBC's John Chancellor does not stir me often on specific issues, though a reading of his commentaries makes them appear at once tougher and better reasoned than when I hear them. He did, however, once bring me up short when it sounded as if he had endorsed the nuclear balance of terror: "Without the Bomb, there might very well have been a war, or several wars, involving Americans and Russians. . . . Everybody hates nuclear weapons, but they have been handled with great prudence by the leaders of the Soviet Union and the United States. The politicians have seen to it that in four decades, no nuclear weapon has been used in anger . . . the politicians in Washington and Moscow have kept the peace, and the Bomb has helped make that possible."

What Chancellor failed to mention is that we know that several Administrations talked of using the Bomb at the highest levels during times of international crises—and can we not assume that the Soviets might have kicked that notion around as well? I do not mean to charge Chancellor with being a mad bomber—he opposes "Star Wars" on the grounds of probable ineffectiveness and an escalation of the arms race, and he pays homage to the cause of true disarmament—but it seems to me he low-rates the scary potential that one day some President or some Soviet leader might fail to be as prudent as his predecessor. And it requires only one such mistake to erase the past in a flash—as well as the present and, perhaps, the future. But in singling out this one comment by John Chancellor, I don't want to detract from the body of his work. He's good, and his old-pro qualities are here admired. That he is uncommonly intelligent is borne out by the fact that I probably agree with his conclusions more often than I do with the conclusions of both his counterparts.

Despite his generally soft-spoken manner, Moyers impresses with the force of his succinct zingers:

"The people who dominate policy in both camps don't really believe in arms control at all . . . progress, if it comes at all, will be measured by the eighth of an inch." And: "Many call on Congress, but not everyone gets heard. . . . It's the job of the House Committee on Ways and Means to write a new tax law that is fair to everyone. It's the job of [lobbyists] to make sure that doesn't happen." Also: "Our political leaders are failing us. They won't make hard choices. They damn the [national] debt and then double it." Yet again: "Too many Americans, safely removed, are throwing gasoline on the flames of passion and prejudice in South Africa. The latest is the Reverend Jerry Falwell, who yesterday spoke of Bishop Desmond Tutu as a phony. It was an unfortunate remark. When Bishop Tutu was deciding to put his life on the line to oppose racial apartheid . . ., Reverend Falwell was defending racial segregation in the American South." It's hard to speak much plainer than that.

Don't ask me to name the "best" of the Big Three. Each is good and shows strength in different ways: Will is best at dramatic delivery, Moyers the best writer, Chancellor the most persistent worker, bringing us more opinions and insights into more matters. All are intelligent. Each network should consider itself fortunate in its choice. Each viewer should be grateful for the variety that brightens and makes bolder the news in what is, basically, a bland and timid medium.

I have analyzed the analysts in every way I can think of—except photogenically. Perhaps the less said of that the better: ain't none of 'em any Lesley Stahl, Diane Sawyer or Connie Chung. (END)

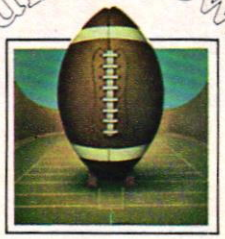
SUPER BOWL



A View from the Winning Huddle

Here's what it takes to beat the pressure and the opposition—from a man who has done it twice

By Joe Montana
with Bob Raissman

NBC will telecast Super Bowl XX from New Orleans on Sunday, Jan. 26. The pre-game show will begin at 3 P.M. (ET); the game telecast will start at 5 P.M. (ET). See "Sports Calendar" for time and channel in your area.

In order to win the Super Bowl you must get to the game on time.

A funny thing happened to the San Francisco 49ers on our way to the Silverdome in Pontiac, Mich., and Super Bowl XVI against Cincinnati in 1982. The bus I was on got stuck in traffic. Now, this wasn't your ordinary traffic jam. We were stopped by the motorcade escorting George Bush, the Vice President of the United States, to the game. My teammates were getting uptight so I played the Kenny Loggins song "This Is It" on my tape player. When the song ended, everyone on the bus was fired up.

"Don't worry, men," coach Bill Walsh said. "Chico just scored a touchdown and Kosmo kicked the extra point." Chico Norton was (and still is) our equipment manager and Greg Kosmo was his assistant. Bill's quip helped soothe the anxiety factor that sets in before any important game. By the time we got to the dome, we were relaxed and ready.

During preparations for both of our Super Bowls—we beat Cincinnati 26-21 and last year defeated Miami 38-16—we stuck real close to our normal routine. Bill kept it loose during the two weeks before the '82 game. When we arrived at our hotel I was met by a graying bell boy who tried to latch on to my bag. He was persistent. I didn't want to give him the bag; he pulled, I pushed. When I studied the guy's face, I realized it was Bill. He had succeeded in loosening us up even before we checked into the hotel.

But despite the relaxed atmosphere going into both Super Bowls, I felt intense pressure. In my mind both games produced (as Kenny Loggins put it) a this-is-it feeling for me.

I look at my career in stages, certain periods of transition. From junior high to high school; high school to college; and college to the pros. In each step up the ladder you go from the top of your class to the bottom. When I hit the pros I thought these football transitions were finally over.

They were—until we went to the Super Bowl. It was a transition from the NFL into another galaxy. It was as if we had been jettisoned from the rest of the league. Who knew what to expect? It was like we weren't getting ready to play football but some strange supernatural game.

The toughest thing mentally for me to deal with was that I knew my past accomplishments meant nothing. Even if I had a great season, I would be labeled a loser if we didn't win. The 49ers had gone further than 26 teams but no one would remember that unless we came out of the game a winner.

This weighed on my mind. What another team's defense might do against us was really of no great concern to me. I have enough confidence in the 49ers' system to know that all our preparation throughout the regular season and the two weeks leading up to the Super Bowl would take care of the strategy elements of the game. I prepare myself so thoroughly during the season that when the playoffs and Super Bowl arrive, game preparation becomes almost secondary. I know exactly what we are trying to accomplish. I know the plays. I'm confident that I've seen or can figure out most of the defenses. We've done certain things over and over again that give me a sense of security, a strong feeling that I can handle anything on the field.

But what I can't predict, and what I start gearing my mind toward, is how my arm is going to be working. How will I execute? Am I going to have the touch that's going to put us over the top? I worry → about one thing in particular: experiencing a football nightmare. A day where everything goes wrong. You know—will I fumble the snap from center? Or kick the ball to a defensive lineman and watch him run it back to me?

You really think about this over and over again. It's like making yourself have a bad dream on purpose. The way I try to prevent a football disaster is by telling myself that I'm going to make mistakes, but that I'm going to avoid the big mistakes at all costs. How many times have you seen your favorite team go mistake-free and then cough the ball up or turn it over in a critical situation?

Going into the Super Bowls, and actually once the games started, I kept telling myself that I wasn't going to give up that big interception, the stupid fumble or the big sack that would turn the game around. If we had to punt the ball away, so be it. But I wasn't going to put our defense in a desperate situation.

Against Cincinnati, people thought we might have gotten too conservative in the second half after we took a 20-0 lead, but I was trying to avoid a major mistake. The 49ers are a ball-control team and that's what we were trying to do, just stay in our game plan. Why start running scared? That's what you're doing when you let someone take you out of your game plan. Although the Bengals' defense was playing well, there was no reason for us to panic and change anything we were doing. You can fight through the little mistakes. But in a Super Bowl, once you gain the momentum, you have to fight hard to avoid any momentum shift.

Last year in the Miami game, the Dolphins quarterback, Dan Marino, drove them down the field early and quickly against us but our defense held. Miami had to settle for a field goal. Dan was throwing the ball real smoothly and looking good early. If he was given a chance to get hot it could have spelled big trouble for us.

When I came back on the field after their field goal I knew we had to score a touchdown. But I also knew we had to push the ball down the field 49ers style, controlling the ball with our short passing attack.

Despite my cautious approach, I didn't hesitate to improvise when I saw a clear-cut chance. In a couple of early drives, I noticed Miami's linebackers were turning their backs on me to try and cover our backs who were running patterns out of the backfield. So I moved out of the pocket and just followed the linebackers down the field. I mean, how could they tackle me with their backs turned to me? This got us some good yardage. We needed to establish that our style could beat them. We did just that and, in my mind, gained the momentum and never relinquished it.

The pressure of the Super Bowl, of handling the craziness and playing within yourself—playing your game—isn't a burden but it is a tremendous challenge. No one can prepare you for the media crush. The only way to learn how to handle it is through experience.

When you are being grilled, not losing your cool is important. I was asked the same questions over and over again. Everything from "What's the key to your offense?" to "Joe, what's your favorite flower?" The trick here is not to say anything that's going to tee anyone off. It's simply not worth giving the other team a psychological weapon, because by the time a team reaches the Super Bowl, it will seize any added psych to hang its hat on. (By the way, the old NFC-AFC rivalry means absolutely nothing to the players. It went out a couple of years after the NFL-AFL merger. The "only" things driving you are the magnitude of the game, the desire to be the best in football—and the $36,000 winner's share.)

We had another kind of motivation last year. I was dying inside during every press conference I attended. Everything was "Marino's done this, Marino's done that, how are you going to stop Marino?" Dan had a great season and I didn't want to take anything away from him but I felt like saying, "You're talking to the wrong guy. I don't have to stop Marino, our defense does. By the way, we have the best defense in football. Listen, our offense is pretty good, too. How's Marino going to score on our D? And how are they going to stop our offense?" I didn't want to be drawn into a duel with Dan. That could have resulted in me getting out of the game plan, forcing the ball down the field throwing long passes, forsaking our short passing game.

The Super Bowls are usually played on eggshells. No one wants to make the first mistake. This approach seems to call for a conservative game plan. That's not our style and this has helped us win. Because our first 25 or so plays are scripted, we get into a flow real fast and aren't really concerned with what the opponent is doing. Last year we came out winging and kept attacking the Dolphins throughout the game. Again, I attribute this to the relaxed atmosphere Bill set before the game. No one felt uptight, no one would be crushed by a loss.

One thing sticks out in my mind about playing in the Super Bowl. A couple of weeks after that first victory over the Bengals, I was thumbing through a book that contained every cover of Sports Illustrated published during the magazine's first 25 years. I saw a lot of great football players who made those covers but most of them never played in the Super Bowl. Of those who did, many never were on the winning team.

If I were walking around today knowing I was a two-time loser, well, let's put it this way, it would be disheartening but not the end of the world. So, for the guys playing in this year's game, the best advice I can give you is: enjoy it. Enjoy what's happening around you and have some fun because, in a career, not many are going to make it as far as you have. END

His 'Tango Delta' Launched This American in Paris

Pierre Salinger's documentary on our hostages in Iran convinced ABC News—and Salinger himself—that he had a bright future as a foreign correspondent

By Roderick Townley

You're invited to a party. The guests are a U.S. senator, a concert pianist, a Presidential press secretary, a ship's captain, a TV actor, a novelist, a French TV personality, an epicure and the chief foreign correspondent for ABC News.

But when you arrive there's only one person there, a bushy-browed, cigar-puffing fellow of 60 who looks like a union boss, or else a riverboat gambler. You're wrong. Pierre Salinger is neither of those things; but he has been, at one time or another, everyone else on our blue-ribbon guest list, and a rollicking raconteur besides. When he starts telling stories, you don't need a roomful of guests. Salinger is a party of one.

As ABC's Paris bureau chief, Pierre Salinger can be found most days in his fifth-floor office on the sedate Avenue d'Eylau on Paris's Right Bank. The bureau's large, high-ceilinged rooms, ornate moldings and narrow, 7-foot windows that open onto the balcony all speak of the glory days when Feodor Chaliapin, the great operatic basso, lived here 50 years ago. Nowadays, as if a cultured mind had chosen to concentrate solely on the mundane, the place has a baldly utilitarian look. Modern fixtures beam down on file cabinets and chugging teletype machines. The walls are a dingy white, the carpeting an awful brown, except in Salinger's office, where it switches to an awful orange. His nook is cozy, with prints and award citations on the wall and books on the shelves; but it, too, reflects a clash between the elegant and the practical. Two clocks stand on a side table; one is an ornate horloge with four circling golden balls and a delicate four-step chime; the other a 24-hour Digimatic that flips up the minutes with all the finesse of a Rolodex.

It's 11:29 A.M. when one of Salinger's assistants pokes his head in and says, "There's a fairly strong interest in the Greenpeace story."

Salinger is already on the case. A respected French politician, Bernard Tricot, has been investigating allegations that his government had ordered the July 10 sinking of "Rainbow Warrior," the flagship of the Greenpeace environmental group. Tricot's 29-page report is due out tomorrow, Aug. 27, but is being leaked today, and Salinger has dispatched a messenger to get a copy of it.

Because of time zones, it's six hours earlier (5:30 A.M.) in New York, so if everyone hustles there's time to get a report onto Good Morning America. Later, he'll do an updated story for World News Tonight. →

12:14 P.M. Paris time. The report arrives. Salinger underlines portions in yellow highlighter. Tricot, it seems, has exonerated the government. Salinger places his yellow Tippa typewriter (a little Dutch manual) on the desk and starts bashing out a script, concluding: "The report clearly implies that six agents of the French CIA, the DGSE, may have been implicated in the sinking, without government instruction . . . [and] will be prosecuted."

He hustles down the hall to a soundproof booth and intones the script into a microphone. ABC's London bureau picks up his words, adds file pictures, and satellites the finished package to New York before David Hartman has had his second cup of coffee.

In Paris, it's time for lunch. That's a special event in Salinger's news bureau, where the cleaning woman cooks up a three-course meal for anyone who wants it. The price, including a decent vin ordinaire, is 60 francs, or about $8.

Most often, Salinger's epicurean tastes and lunchtime meetings take him to Faugeron's or Fouquet's or Maxim's, rather than to ABC's kitchen table. Today it's Le Palais du Trocadéro, a particularly good Chinese restaurant just down the block. There, over a Peking duck and a brisk Tavel rosé, he describes, as best he can figure it out, how he got where he is today.

Born of a French mother and an American father, little Pierre Emil George Salinger was considered a piano prodigy and gave his first concert in 1931, at the age of 6. Among the kids he knew, growing up in San Francisco, was violinist Isaac Stern, and the two would sometimes play together. Not baseball. Duets.

Actually, his parents wished he would play baseball. They worried that he was becoming an introvert and urged him to practice less, socialize more. At 13 he took their advice. "That was fatal for piano," he recalls, a bit wistfully.

The Second World War was an even greater distraction. At 17, he joined the Navy and after a few months' training was sent to the Pacific as the third officer on a 110-foot sub chaser. Before long, the commanding officer was transferred, the second officer ran the ship aground and was suspended, and Pierre Salinger, age 19, became captain. It was then that he took up smoking cigars, perhaps to look more mature. "I had 25 men and I was the youngest man on the ship. It was a very funny experience."

He was somewhat less amused when Japan surrendered and his boat was converted into a mine sweeper assigned to the southern Japanese coast. The idea of getting blown up after the war was not appealing.

Neither was the idea of getting blown overboard. Caught in a typhoon, Salinger saved his boat by running it aground on a sandy beach, then helped save 14 seamen stranded on a sand bar. He was later awarded the Navy and Marine Corps Medal for his efforts—the same medal given John F. Kennedy for his exploits on PT-109.

Back in civvies, the versatile Salinger went into journalism. Returned to it, really, since he'd already made a start as a sportswriter at the San Francisco Chronicle when he was 16. Years later, while working on investigative articles for Collier's magazine, he met Robert Kennedy, and soon Salinger was working on investigations for a Senate select committee. Through that work he became known to Jack Kennedy, was made his campaign press secretary and ultimately press secretary for the Kennedy White House. At 35, Salinger was an internationally known figure at the hub of American power.

Although French was sometimes spoken in his home, Salinger had not been in France between 1925, when he was baptized in the cathedral of Notre Dame in Paris, and 1961, when Kennedy sent him over to set up a meeting with President Charles de Gaulle. Salinger's rusty French came back almost as soon as the plane touched down, and he found himself giving press conferences in French. He also fell in love with Paris and returned as often as he could during the next few years, developing friends and powerful Gallic contacts in the process. "He's → got not only impressive contacts," says ABC executive producer Robert E. Frye, "he's got very deep contacts."

Those contacts have only deepened over the past quarter-century, so that, at NBC's Paris bureau across town, correspondent Paul Miller ruefully concedes: "We're not even in the same league with the guy. . . . If he wants to know what the president of France thinks, he can call him up. I'd end up, if I'm real lucky, talking to one of the president's higher-up press people."

The magic door-opening word has always been "Kennedy," who is still venerated in Europe; but it hasn't hurt that Salinger was also a U.S. senator. In August 1964, California governor Edmund G. Brown appointed him to fill the seat of Clair Engle, who had died. In his five months in office, Salinger was part of at least two memorable events: he voted (with 87 other senators) for the Tonkin Gulf Resolution, widening the U.S. role in Vietnam; and he met a young French journalist named Nicole, who would become his third wife.

By his first marriage, in 1947, Salinger had three children, one of whom died. His daughter Suzanne, 34, and son Stephen, 33, now live in the States. He had no children by his second wife, who was with him during the Kennedy years, but who (according to Salinger) "couldn't stand being around politics or the White House." Nicole bore him a son, Gregory, 19, currently a senior at Swarthmore College. He doesn't see his children much, but says he talks to them every week. "They're programmed into my telephone computer."

John Kennedy's death in 1963 and Robert Kennedy's death in 1968 had shaken him badly, and in 1971 Salinger and his family moved to France for good. France took Salinger in and treated him very well. He worked first for an investment company, then took a writing job with "L'Express," the French newsweekly, where he stayed six years. As a politically astute, forceful, bilingual American, he attained celebrity status on French TV talk shows.

All this made him a very attractive commodity to Roone Arledge, currently president of ABC's news and sports divisions, and in 1976 Arledge inveigled Salinger into doing a few human-interest pieces on the Winter Games at Innsbruck. Salinger recalls his debut as a TV newsman: "I'd never done a stand-up before. I can respond to a question, but standing in front of a camera with a script . . . totally terrified me." He must have done all right, because in January 1978 ABC hired him as a consultant. By September he was a full-time correspondent.

Salinger on his TV debut: "Standing in front of a camera with a script...totally terrified me."

"All of us at ABC were aware that this household name, Pierre Salinger, had become one of our peers," recalls correspondent Greg Dobbs of the ABC Paris bureau, "and we wondered how quickly he would rise and on whose coattails he would ride. But in fact he had to rise on his merits and rode nobody's coattails, because he was put on the same bloody stakeouts as the rest of us."

Early in 1980, for instance, when Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia lay dying, Salinger was one of the reporters who had to hang around Belgrade for weeks waiting for confirmation of his death. ABC cameraman Rupen Vosgimorukian was there and remembers that one night, to liven things up, Salinger got the correspondents and technicians from all three networks together, sat down at the hotel's piano and gave an impromptu concert. Those who didn't know his background were stunned to hear effortless arpeggios flowing from the fingers of this cigar-puffing ABC correspondent.

Of course, he was never "just" a correspondent, and in fact by then he'd already been made Paris bureau chief. He may have had to "earn his stripes," as Dobbs puts it, but he earned them with lightning speed.

Still, he was not happy. Compared to print journalism, TV news seemed both trivial and cumbersome. One depended on too many people, lugged too much equipment and ended up with too little air time to tell the story. Salinger might have left TV entirely were it not for an extraordinary journalistic opportunity that came his way in 1980, during the 444-day Iranian hostage crisis.

Through his sister-in-law, a leftist lawyer, he came in contact with two lawyers who were intimately involved in secret negotiations to free the Americans. Salinger gained the trust of these men and they kept him informed of developments, on the condition that he broadcast none of that information yet.

Roone Arledge gave Salinger the go-ahead to begin work on a documentary about those negotiations, and numerous Concorde flights between New York and Paris ensued. "Pierre started off with a regular old briefcase," recalls Robert E. Frye, co-executive producer of the documentary, "but finally he got one of those steel cases with proper locks on it, because he was carrying around material that could have blown the negotiations wide open and endangered the hostages."

So secret was the project (which was given a code name, "Tango Delta") that in December 1980 Salinger set up a work space in Suite 1001 of New York's Plaza Hotel, rather than at the ABC News offices 10 blocks to the north. A microwave dish, installed in the hotel window, beamed the latest material up to a select few at ABC.

When, on Jan. 20, 1981, the hostages were finally released, Salinger felt as though he had been released, too. The lid of secrecy was off. Two days later, the three-hour documentary, "America Held Hostage: The Secret Negotiations," was broadcast to high ratings and even higher critical acclaim. That one piece of work made Pierre Salinger's name at ABC. And when, in 1983, Peter Jennings was brought to New York to anchor the news, Salinger inherited Jennings' old title: chief foreign correspondent.

Salinger has done several other commendable documentaries, such as an examination of the world banking crisis, called "On Borrowed Time," and an investigation of art thieves, called "Alias A. John Blake," but nothing else of the scope and complexity of "America Held Hostage." Still, he manages to get excited about many of the stories he does and tries, in the words of Greg Dobbs, "to cover France like City Hall."

Correspondents and crew say he runs a relaxed news bureau where everyone's expected to do a good job but no one's expected to punch a time clock or follow a dress code. He himself tends to look rumpled and is invariably seen in the same black knitted tie held by the same gold-plated PT-109 tie clasp. But don't be deceived. The cigar he's savoring is a fine Romeo y Julieta. The bright handkerchief in his breast pocket is silk. The gold cuff links bear the seal of the U.S Senate. The suit is Guy la Roche. The white-on-white striped shirt is Charvet. The black boots are Gucci. He jets around the world frequently and always goes first class.

And when he comes home he's got an enviable choice. There's the spacious apartment on the Rue de Rivoli, overlooking the gardens of the Tuileries; and then there's his château, two hours by car south of Paris.

Yes, château. Bought in 1969, it boasts seven bedrooms, two living rooms, two towers, two guard dogs and a gardener. It's quiet there. Only occasionally does he run into his neighbor, former French President Giscard d'Estaing.

Whenever Salinger needs to escape the chaos of his beloved Paris, he drives out to the château, finding his way back, through the multiplicity of his occupations, to his private self. That self is well protected by his bluff, gregarious exterior, his ebullient successes. It's a self, one senses, that outsiders are not permitted to know.

During those special, quiet times, he sits alone at his shiny grand piano in the high-ceilinged living room. And he plays and plays. (END)

Billy Dee Williams (above, left) has signed to star opposite Gregory Harrison (above, right) in "The Rig," a CBS TV-movie about a team of misfit ex-cons who sign on as divers on the world's deepest oil rig. Much of the location shooting is scheduled to take place on an oil rig off the coast of Mexico, but—unfortunately for Williams—he tends to get seasick. He says he plans to stock up on anti-nausea pills, but he might be wiser emulating the tough-guy character he plays in the film. Asked in one scene why he has a hook for a hand, the guy replies: "I didn't like the way it looked and cut it off."

ABC's Texas millionaire detective Matt Houston died—and Lee Horsley went to heaven, or at least its Hollywood equivalent. In ABC's upcoming Crossings, Horsley plays Jane Seymour's husband—and Cheryl Ladd's lover. In North and South, Book II (also for ABC), he's involved with Lesley-Anne Down. "It's a luxury to be cast in these roles," says Horsley (below, with Down). "It's definitely a stretch to go from a private eye to the Civil War, but I was very ready to try on a new pair of boots. Let's put it this way: it sure beats a sharp stick in the eye."

Back to His Roots

In 1980, Karl Malden played the patriarch of a steelworking family in the series Skag. In "Billy Galvin," a theatrical film that will later air on PBS's American Playhouse, he's a construction worker who doesn't want his son to follow in his footsteps. "You look at my face," says Malden (above, left, with co-star Lenny von Dohlen), "and you know why I get those roles. I understood the story immediately because every father doesn't want his son—when you come from that background—to do what he's doing." Malden himself was "born in a steel town" and was a steelworker for three years, "long enough," he says, "to know that there was no future for me in it."

Chemical Reaction

The new NBC series Blacke's Magic stars Hal Linden (below, right) as a world-famous magician turned private detective and Harry Morgan (below, left) as his dad, a one-time scam artist. "Hal and I have a great relationship in the story, which I think is the key to making the show work," says Morgan. And what's the secret to that relationship? "It's chemistry," says Morgan, "and I don't know how to explain it. Either it works or it doesn't."

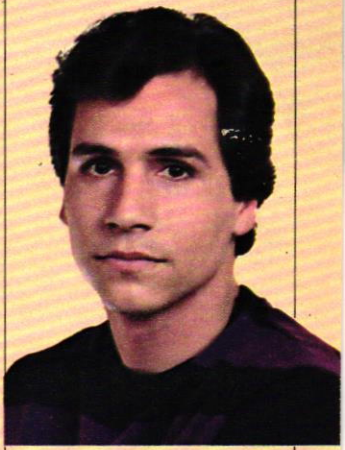
louse, and I didn't see it! Later, the director told me I probably had gotten the part because I came across as if I thought he was OK."

Cliff-Hanger

Showtime's Brothers is a sitcom about three of them—one of whom, Cliff, is a homosexual. The question on the set these days is how much of a sex life the character should have. According to Paul Regina (below), the straight actor who plays Cliff, "He's at that point where he really has to decide what he wants from [his boy friends]. He's 25, but basically an adolescent." So far, Cliff has gotten just one peck on the lips, but that hasn't deterred Regina's growing fan club of adoring women. His explanation? "In a world where Michael Jackson is a sex symbol, I think Cliff comes off as Rambo."



Too Close For Comfort

"On the Wings of Eagles" is the story of two American businessmen kidnapped in Tehran. Location filming for the upcoming NBC TV-movie was done in Mexico City. The setting turned out to be a grim reminder of life's fragility. "You can't go anywhere without seeing signs of the earthquake damage," reports Jim Metzler (below), the young actor who co-stars in "Wings" with Richard Crenna and Burt Lancaster. "We've had some locations where the building we've used is fine, but on both sides of the building, it was mere rubble. It makes you wonder about acts of God."

You're right, the fellow in the picture above isn't Don Johnson. It's really Michael Landon, the resident angel of NBC's Highway to Heaven, as he appears—in character as Jonathan Smith—on the show's Feb. 5 episode. What's an angel doing dressed like a fugitive from Miami Vice? A good deed, of course, in this case a service for Jonathan's widow and the daughter who refuses to come to see her until she's convinced that mom really plans to marry this hipster.

Role Models?

In 1953, Ray Bradbury visited the Irish castle of director John Huston with a script for "Moby Dick." Years later, Bradbury loosely adapted their meeting into a chilling little tale called "Banshee." That story comes to HBO's Ray Bradbury Theater next month, with Peter O'Toole (below, left) as the director and Charles Martin Smith (below, right) as the writer. O'Toole and Huston teamed on 1966's "The Bible"; however, the veteran star denies he aped Huston for this role. "I just don't ever work that way. [The character] is now John Hampton. I've laid my alchemist hands on him." Well then, is Smith trying to do a young Ray Bradbury? "I only met him once, so how do you? Ray named my character Douglas Rogers, so I'm trying to do a young Douglas Rogers." And how about working with O'Toole? "I don't want to say I'm awed," says Smith, "but I'm very impressed. One of my favorite films of all time is 'The Ruling Class.' Peter's performance in it is one of the best I've ever seen. I told him that right off the bat—and then recited half his lines."

More important, perhaps, is the fact that Jake's on-again, off-again relationship with nurse Bobbie Spencer (Jackie Zeman) now seems headed for high gear. Watch for the fireworks to fly as the lovers everyone wants to get together finally do.

The Helpful Headmen

Football broadcasters can't help but like cooperative football coaches. The problem is trying to find one, especially these days, when gridiron strategy is often treated as if it were as intricate as brain surgery. Undaunted, however, CBS's Verne Lundquist looks at the 1985 campaign and picks out five head coaches he found most forthcoming: 1.) Sam Wyche (above, Cincinnati): "Sam understands what the role of a broadcast team is in the presentation of a game," says Lundquist. "He knows what we need to be informative." 2.) Bill Parcells (New York Giants): "He's a young coach who didn't grow up in the old days of mystery and intrigue. He doesn't act like every offensive or defensive play he's designed is a state secret." 3.) Bum Phillips (New Orleans): "Probably the most open coach in the business." 4.) John Robinson (Los Angeles Rams): "He's willing to tell you where the Rams are weak, as well as what he perceives his opponent's weaknesses to be." 5.) Jim Hanifan (St. Louis): "An honest man who will assess his team with great candor." . . . Alas, only two of Lundquist's most cooperative coaches made the playoffs. Hanifan was fired after week 16—and Phillips failed to get that far, passing on the Saints job to his son Wade after week 12. It would be a shame if candor became a synonym for losing. . . .

Over on the boxing beat, ABC will match heavyweight contenders Carl "The Truth" Williams and Mike "Hercules" Weaver, Feb. 16. According to Williams (below), Weaver, the one-time WBA titlist, is a dinosaur. "The Truth" expects Weaver to do some early head-hunting, but "I don't intend to be there for him [to hit]. News Update

Documentary Unit Decimated At NBC News

NBC News has virtually wiped out its documentary unit, leaving many employees wondering how the network will produce the nine documentaries recently announced by president Larry Grossman. The documentary unit was diminished more than a year ago when 10 of its 24 people were laid off; since then almost all the remaining staffers have been dropped through reassignments, layoffs and special retirement policies. By next month, only one full-time NBC producer will remain in the documentary unit—Bob Rogers, who operates out of Washington and is the manager of the unit.

Some of the slack will be taken up by producers who have been given freelance contracts for individual projects, such as Tom Brokaw's special on AIDS (Jan. 21), a one-hour documentary on Japanese technology, and a special on single-parent families with Jane Pauley as host. The nine announced documentaries will not all be seen this year.

NBC's religion unit, which was moved from News to Corporate Communications a year ago, will be obliterated by March 31. The unit's nine employees are being helped to find other jobs at NBC and several of them have already done so.

The News layoffs have intensified disenchantment among traditionalists at NBC over what they say is an increasing emphasis on hype and promotion and an underemphasis on in-depth reporting. "We used to have a News president who fought for documentaries that were scheduled seasons in advance," says one former NBC News producer. "But now the attitude is that we do a hurry-up, superficial job that is called a documentary, like the one Tom Brokaw is doing on AIDS."

NBC News president Larry Grossman declined to comment on the layoffs or to explain how future documentaries will be produced. But an NBC spokesman, Bill McAndrew, denies that traditionalists are dissatisfied: "I haven't heard any talk like that in any of the areas in which I'm involved or in any of the NBC hallways."

Family Ties May Be Moved

NBC researchers have concluded that Family Ties can be a successful show on its own—without the huge Cosby Show lead-in it now enjoys—and network executives are considering moving it.

Programmers are notoriously conservative about rescheduling popular series, because there are many examples of such ploys backfiring. The NBC research department has yet to make its official recommendation, but studies called "competitives" have been conducted, in which viewers were

Best-Case Scenario

Jane Wyman, having recently undergone abdominal surgery, is proving as iron-willed as Angela Channing, the matriarch she plays on Falcon Crest. Rather than spend another week in the hospital—as had been announced—Wyman told her producers to send a car to take her home, where she'll spend the next three weeks recuperating and then go back to work. The producers, concerned that Wyman might take longer to mend, had considered sending Angela off on a business trip to Europe for a few weeks. Instead, only a few of Wyman's scenes will have to be cut.

He Filled The Bill

The producers of ABC's forthcoming miniseries North and South, Book II, had a role that needed filling—so they went to the dentist. In fact, John Nixon, a Birmingham, Ala., dentist and part-time actor, went to a local audition and won the part of Washington, a freed slave who inherits part of the plantation he worked. The casting is somewhat ironic, since Dr. Nixon himself was president of the Birmingham chapter of the NAACP in 1963, at the peak of the civil-rights movement. Playing Washington, he says, "is a great opportunity to show what slavery was all about. A lot of young black people don't know any more."

Knight Slider

New TV proverb: stars who insist on doing their own stunts risk getting hurt in the end. Just ask Knight Rider's David Hasselhoff, whose character, Michael Knight, was called upon in one scene to slide down a banister. Hasselhoff, doing it himself, wound up needing emergency surgery on his posterior. "I'm on my feet and walking around now," he reports. "But I'm not sitting so pretty."

A Feast They Won't Forget

It was not your typical Hollywood bash. Hundreds of homeless people in Washington, D.C., recently streamed into a local shelter for a party thrown by Mitch Snyder, an activist for the homeless whose life is the subject of an upcoming CBS TV-movie. The cuisine—donated by some of the capital's poshest restaurateurs—included such delicacies as Marscopone cheese (with pine nuts and basil, if you please) and, for the main course, sliced roast beef, turkey and ham with honeyed mustard. The guests, says an insider, ate almost everything and "even took the candles, God bless 'em."

The Late Shoe

How seriously do they take fashion on Knots Landing? Very. Lisa Hartman (Cathy) was about to go on the set. Her hair was perfect, her dress form-fitting, her shoes . . . stop the cameras! Hartman had no shoes to match. Emergency! A car was ordered, and the star was sent speeding off to a chic Beverly Hills department store. Alerted by phone, salesclerks scoured the stockroom for something stunning but tasteful in a size 7. As the car screeched into the store's parking lot, the top candidates were waiting on the curb. Hartman picked a pair and slipped them on. They fit. She split—back to the set, a fashion disaster averted.

As We See It

☐ The deaths of TV stars are often likened to deaths in the family. Indeed, because these people come into our living rooms every week and hence are our intimates, they are as familiar to us as (or even more familiar than) our own housemates. Thus the shock on New Year's Eve when bulletins announced that Rick Nelson, age 45, had died in an airplane crash.

Rick Nelson literally was a "TV kid." Many of us watched him grow up on the long-running (14 seasons) series The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet, in which he starred with his parents and his older brother, David. The images remain vivid: the "irrepressible" preteen Ricky ("I don't mess around, boy"), a kind of scaled-down sitcom version of Dennis the Menace; the teen-age singing idol, now called Rick, with greasered hair, a Presley-esque sneer and a twanging guitar; the college student shown indulging in playful fraternity and malt-shop high jinks; and, in the show's latter days, the young married man. Television, in a sense, compiled a video record of Rick Nelson's youth—a family album that has recently added his daughter Tracy (Square Pegs, Glitter) and his former brother-in-law, Mark Harmon (St. Elsewhere, Flamingo Road).

☐ Ironically, a death in the family is one "adventure" that would never have intruded upon the placid, sunny, suburban world of the TV Nelsons. By contrast, when actors in today's popular prime-time series die, it's almost obligatory to do "tribute" episodes explaining and mourning their deaths. Such segments are often done tastefully and touchingly and are evidence of TV's advancing maturity.

At the same time, they are a measure of the medium's lost innocence. We can't imagine an Ozzie and Harriet episode dealing with the passing of a Nelson family member, and we wouldn't want to. It would be as jarring as Dallas's J.R. Ewing suddenly entering a monastery. Instead, we'll save the "tributes" for today's more "relevant" shows and console ourselves with fond memories of TV's more carefree days—and of the irrepressible Ricky.

TV AND THE WORKING CLASS

Michael Leahy's article analyzing the attitudes toward TV programming of one segment of the white working class in this country was right on ["Attention, Networks: Don't Misjudge Working-Class America," Dec. 21]. We're a young, white, working-class family similar in background to those in Cicero, Ill., also suffering from unemployment and hard times. We consider network TV as that constant, obnoxious noise in the background of everyday life. We do love public radio and TV, though. Public TV educates, entertains and enriches us. I don't know what we'd do without it.

Regina W. Hansen
Whittier, Cal.

Michael Leahy's article showed us not what the people of Cicero would like to see on television, but a much more revealing side of their personalities. They'll watch Bill Cosby on television, but God forbid he should try to move in next door. It looks like not much has changed in Cicero since the '60s.

PAY THE PIPER

Three cheers to Walter H. Annenberg for voicing his opinion in favor of the rights of songwriters to be paid fairly when their music is used in television shows ["Songwriters Hear a Sour Note from TV," Dec. 28]. Music may be the universal language, but "money talks" in every tongue. If the TV networks and stations want to keep hearing the music, let them pay the men (and women) who write the tunes.

Robin Johnston
Bradley, Ill.

I have just had the pleasure of reading Walter H. Annenberg's commentary regarding the Boucher-Hyde bill [which would reduce payments to songwriters for use of their music on television] and hasten to write my heartfelt thanks. This com-

Around the end of January our news is the same from one year to the next. There's the Big Game, and there's the Big Speech, each as fixed in the national firmament as the North Star. This year we'll see Super Bowl XX, with the Patriots ranged against the Bears, and we'll hear the 1986 State of the Union Address, brightened (we hope) by a spark or two of optimism from that famous Geneva fireside.

On Masterpiece Theatre a six-part history begins of the tortuous divorce proceedings that led, in 1947, to the untying of the imperial knot between Britain and India. Lord Louis Mountbatten (Nicol Williamson), cousin to King George VI, became Britain's point man in these fateful negotiations. Arriving in Delhi entrusted with full executive powers, he was required to hammer out an agreement that would satisfy not only his own government in London but every major political and religious grouping on the subcontinent: Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs and a multitude of semisovereign maharajahs. The revered Mahatma Gandhi stood on one side with a pacifist blueprint for independence, while on the other, sectarian radicals of a more brutish temper were ready to stake out their territories with any instrument that came to hand. A solution that avoided bloodshed was improbable and, in the end, unattainable.

Lord Mountbatten: The Last Viceroy is an astonishing piece of workmanship—a docudrama so free of soap-opera excrescences that American viewers attuned to the likes of Mussolini: The Untold Story might call in demanding a refund. "Too close to the real thing," they will complain. "Too informative." And, of course, "Where's the sex?" To this last question the answer is simple: the sex is in every frame, sneakily disguised as voluptuous production and seductive performance. For adults only.

"Too informative" is a criticism that can be justly leveled at "Sue the Doctor?" a Frontline report on medical-malpractice suits. The producers of this program decided that they could best convey the anxieties now inherent in the practice of medicine by following the case of an expectant mother who has suffered complications in her pregnancy. How should her obstetrician respond? Whatever he does or doesn't do, it seems, is fraught with risks to his professional future. If the baby is damaged, would he be able to convince a jury that he acted correctly?

The dilemma is clear enough. We hardly need chapter and verse on the arcana of obstetrics in order to grasp it. Yet ch. & ver. are laid on in profusion. By hour's end, a viewer is halfway toward a diploma in midwifery while still wanting to know how society can protect itself against the twin scandals of physicians' foul-ups and patients' (and lawyers') opportunistic greed.

There's also: a CBS Reports documentary, presented by Bill Moyers, on the breakdown of the two-parent family in black America, where an estimated 60 per cent of children are now born out of wedlock . . . a Bob Hope Super Bowl special . . . a new CBS sitcom, Melba, starring Melba Moore . . . the American Music Awards, hosted by Diana Ross . . . and a North Carolina-Georgia Tech College Basketball game.

ON CABLE

ESPN's second foray into drama isn't quite as remarkable as its first. Lombardi—I Am Not a Legend places lesser demands on its principal actor than those faced by Max Gail in last October's monologue "The Babe." Nevertheless, this biographical portrait of the legendary Green Bay coach who claimed not to be anything special is well worth watching, both for its clever encapsulation of Lombardi's career and for highly professional performances from Robert Knuckle in the title role and Dan Penrose as a succession of figures in the coach's life. A generous slice of Americana—made in Canada.

And for a generous slice of Mother Russia—made in Britain—turn to Ivan Turgenev's A Month in the Country, a 19th-century classic revived by the BBC with rare charm and televisual splendor. Eleanor Bron holds center stage as the moody Natalya who finds herself living under the same spacious roof with three significant others: her doting but colorless husband (Richard Briers), a family friend whose affections she has irresponsibly inflamed (Ian Charleson) and her newly discovered love object (Shaun Scott), the tutor to her ward. A testing time is had by all, but we and Turgenev have a good old theatrical blast.

When two engaging people fall into conversation with each other, one can enjoy eavesdropping on them even though they have nothing particularly important to discuss. So it is when Dick Cavett interviews James Garner. A few puffs of small talk, a little light banter, and before you know it an hour has passed.

Also: CNN has live coverage of the State of the Union Address.

mentary is of tremendous help in coping with this latest effort to erode our creative rights. It precisely clarifies the destructive intent of the Boucher-Hyde bill, and should help in its defeat.

Morton Gould
Great Neck, N.Y.

As one who has spent more than 50 years writing songs, it is reassuring to have someone such as Mr. Annenberg speak out on behalf of songwriters. We have been embattled for so many years, fighting to preserve our rights to collect royalties whenever our works are performed on radio and TV. His commentary is the clearest setting forth of what we have to deal with I have seen.

JEERING SECTION

To applaud Cagney & Lacey and Spenser: For Hire for having plots involving abortions of babies that were merely inconvenient was bad enough, but to jeer Dallas for trying to show the other side of the issue—that there are other choices for parents like Donna and Ray Krebbs, who learned that their expected child would be handicapped—was criminal on your part ["Cheers 'n' Jeers," Jan. 4]. Even though it was ultimately decided that a less than perfect child could not reside at Southfork, hence the miscarriage, the writers were still sensitive enough to further address the issue by having Donna decide to work at a school with Down's syndrome children.

Mrs. G.K. Young
Phoenix, Ariz.

I feel you owe an apology to the writers of Cheers, since what you did, in effect, was to jeer them for keeping Sam Malone true to his character. All of us have some bad points, and one of Sam's is that he rates women mainly on their appearance. While his rejection of the Weight Watcher was taken by you as a cheap shot, I would have been disappointed if he had reacted any other way.

THIS WEEK'S MOVIES

BY JUDITH CRIST

BROADCAST:		Mon., NBC	A Masterpiece of Murder
Sun., CBS	Agatha Christie's 'Murder with Mirrors'
Sun., ABC	Single Bars, Single Women	ON CABLE:
Sun., NBC	The Last Precinct	MAX	The Falcon and the Snowman

What is there to say about a network-movie week that offers two unknown quantities and two repeats? Only that programmers seem to be tottering on the uncertainties of an upcoming "sweeps"—or ratings competition—month and that one can only be skeptical about made-for-TV movies (i.e., the "unknown quantities") that are still in production or are being revised or reedited almost up to air time.

Unavailable for preview were The Last Precinct, the pilot for an upcoming but at this point unscheduled series, and A Masterpiece of Murder, which marks Bob Hope's TV-movie debut. Unknown quantities indeed.

The two TV-movie repeats are, however, worth one's while. In 1985's Agatha Christie's 'Murder with Mirrors' Helen Hayes once again portrays Miss Jane Marple; she had made a most successful debut as the sage of St. Mary Mead in 1983's "Agatha Christie's 'A Caribbean Mystery'." In "Murder with Mirrors," its teleplay by George Eckstein directed by Dick Lowry, Hayes' Miss Marple comes to the rescue of Bette Davis's Carrie Louise Serrocold, an old friend whose ancestral home is suddenly sprouting both intrigue and corpses. Davis was recovering from a severe illness at the time of the filming, but both ladies are in fine form and head a first-rank cast that includes John Mills, Leo McKern and Dorothy Tutin. It's classy entertainment.

Also on its second run, 1984's Single Bars, Single Women explores the small-town singles-bar scene with intelligence if not inspiration. It also offers some first-rate star turns by Christine Lahti, Shelley Hack, Mare Winningham and Kathleen Wilhoite as various lonely women in search of one-night stands, relationships and/or simple sociability. Lahti is outstanding as a shy teacher looking for "a real date" and Tony Danza is fine as a womanizer.

ON CABLE

John Schlesinger's The Falcon and the Snowman is the sole 1985 newcomer to cable this week and it deserves the showcasing. Based on Robert Lindsey's best-selling "true story of friendship and espionage," the film brings Sean Penn to major stardom alongside Timothy Hutton in a dazzling duet reminiscent of Schlesinger's achievement with Jon Voight and Dustin Hoffman in 1969's "Midnight Cowboy."

This is the complex and complicated story of Christopher Boyce (Hutton) and Daulton Lee (Penn), two Californians arrested for espionage in 1977. Boyce, a college dropout with a job in a top-secret CIA satellite-tracking company, provided the information and Lee, a druggy and a drug dealer, delivered it to the Soviets in Mexico. It was, they thought, a game, but it turned into serious business. The fascination of the film lies not merely in the banality of both evil and espionage but in the question of where patriotic ideals and family relationships go astray. It is a low-keyed spy thriller and one enthralling in its complexity beneath the surface simple-mindedness of the two young men, brilliantly portrayed.

In some areas broadcast movies may not be seen on the days indicated. For times of cable movies, see listings and Pay-TV Movie Guide.

THE VANISHING FAMILY—CRISIS IN BLACK AMERICA

Bill Moyers reports on the status of the black American family.

Twenty-five years ago, he says, 75 per cent of all black children had two parents in the home. Today, while eight out of every 10 white children live with both parents, only four out of 10 black children do. Usually it's the father who is gone, and the result, according to Moyers, is that "the strong traditional family—once the backbone of black America—is disappearing in the inner city. Poor single mothers and their children are the fastest growing part of the black population."

This 90-minute documentary (still being edited at press time) profiles "the human beings behind the statistics" in Newark, N.J., a "representative" inner city where members of three black families speak about their dreams and disappointments; and about parenthood, sex and other subjects that define their "stories." Many blacks growing up with just one parent, Moyers says, will one day have children of their own and repeat the cycle. "It's a world turned inside out; children copy what they see and begin to repeat what they learn."

[Following the film, Moyers moderates a 30-minute panel discussion featuring the Rev. Jesse Jackson, economist Glenn Loury and former Equal Employment Opportunity Commission chairman Eleanor Holmes-Norton.]

SUPER BOWL XX
5 PM 6 9 11 21

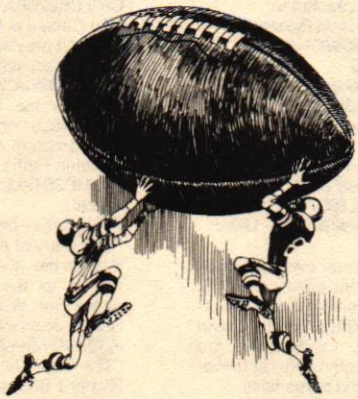
The New England Patriots (14-5) take on the Chicago Bears (17-1) at the Superdome in New Orleans. Dick Enberg handles the play-by-play, with commentary by Merlin Olsen and Bob Griese. (Live)

NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS

QUARTERBACKS: Eason (11); T. Ramsey (12); Grogan (14). Eason has played well since replacing the injured Grogan at the helm of this ball-control offense.

RUNNING BACKS: Weathers (24); Tatupu (30); C. James (32); Collins (33). With James running inside and Collins outside, the rush is the Pats' chief offensive weapon. Collins is also the team's top receiver.

RECEIVERS: Hawthorne (27); Starring (81); Jones (83); Morgan (86); Dawson (87); D. Ramsey (88). Speedy receivers are underused in the ground-oriented offense. With Irving Fryar out, Morgan is the chief threat.



OFFENSIVE LINE: Brock (58); Wooten (61); Fairchild (66); Moore (67); Plunkett (70); Hannah (73); Morriss (75); Holloway (76). Pats like to run left behind Pro Bowlers Hannah and Holloway. This line reduced their sacks-allowed to 39 from 66 last year.

DEFENSIVE LINE: Veris (60); Williams (72); Adams (85); Creswell (92); Owens (98); Thomas (99). Excellent against the rush, they can also open lanes for blitzing linebackers.

LINEBACKERS: McGrew (50); Ingram (51); Rembert (52); Williams (54); Blackmon (55); Tippett (56); Nelson (57); Reynolds (95). The heart of the Patriot defense, this talented group is led by All-Pros Tippett (AFC leader with 16.5 sacks) and Nelson (the team's leading tackler).

SECONDARY: McSwain (23); Clayborn (26); Bowman (28); Marion (31); R. James (38); Lippett (42); Gibson (43). Aggressive and opportunistic, they strip balls from receivers as often as they intercept passes. (The Pats had 16 takeaways in three playoff games.)

SPECIAL TEAMS: Franklin (1); Camarillo (3). Placekicker Franklin had his best year, scoring 112 points. Camarillo punted for a 43.0 average, fifth best in the NFL. The Pats will miss the injured Irving Fryar on punt returns—he led the NFL.

CHICAGO BEARS

QUARTERBACKS: Fuller (4); McMahon (9); Tomczak (18). McMahon is a big-play passer but can be affected by defensive pressure.

RUNNING BACKS: Sanders (20); Suhey (26); Gentry (29); Thomas (33); Payton (34). The Bears were by far the NFL's top rushing team. Payton, who topped 2000 all-purpose yards for the fourth time, gets capable blocking from Suhey (when he needs it).

RECEIVERS: Wrightman (80); Margerum (82); Gault (83); McKinnon (85); Anderson (86); Moorehead (87); Ortego (89). This may be the Bears' weak link on offense, but Gault can put foes away with a big reception.

OFFENSIVE LINE: Thayer (57); Andrews (60); Bortz (62); Hilgenberg (63); Frederick (71); Covert (74); Humphries (75); Van Horne (78). They have no problems opening holes for Payton and give McMahon adequate protection. Covert and Hilgenberg are Pro Bowlers.

DEFENSIVE LINE: Waechter (70); Perry (72); Hartenstine (73); McMichael (76); Dent (95); Keys (98); Hampton (99). Tenacious and punishing, the Bears were tops in the NFL against the rush in '85 and are relentless pressuring passers.

LINEBACKERS: Singletary (50); Morrissey (51); Thrift (52); Wilson (55); Marshall (58); Rivera (59). Led by Singletary, they may be the NFL's quickest, equally capable of chasing down receivers and demolishing a running attack.

SECONDARY: Frazier (21); Duerson (22); Gayle (23); Richardson (27); Taylor (31); Fencik (45); Phillips (48). A ball-hawking group that helped lead the NFL in interceptions (34). But if the Bear defense has a weakness, it may be that the backs are susceptible to a quick receiver downfield.

SPECIAL TEAMS: Butler (6); Buford (8). Rookie placekicker Butler led the NFL in scoring (144 points). Buford averaged 42.2 yards per punt.

LOMBARDI: I AM NOT A LEGEND
9 PM (ESN)

Robert Knuckle stars as the Hall of Fame football coach, who led the Green Bay Packers to five NFL titles, including victories in the first two Super Bowls.

The two-man play, which features Dick Penrose in supporting roles, uses Lombardi's own words to chronicle the life and career of a gruff and domineering coach "few players liked . . . but almost all of them loved . . . "

☐ On football: "Football is not only a man's job, it's his profession. [It's] endowed with an ethical function, a sense of high purpose. . . . see, it demonstrates the benefits that can derive from effort and discipline, self denial and . . . teamwork."

☐ On his game plan: "We will attack a team's strength and crush it. We will break their spirit."

☐ On Paul Hornung: "Maybe Paul was the kind of guy I always wanted to be. I mean, I only had one girl friend; I married her."

☐ On Bart Starr: he was "a 17th round draft choice, a third string quarterback on a last place team. His arm was fine, all he needed was some confidence."

☐ On his status: "I am not a legend. Every legend I know of is dead."

LORD MOUNTBATTEN: THE LAST VICEROY

By the end of 1946, Britain had finally decided to relinquish the most precious jewel in the empire's crown—India. The man chosen to see that India reached independence was Louis Mountbatten, a wartime hero but perhaps better known as a patrician playboy. This six-part series dramatizes what would prove to be one of the most distinguished episodes in Mountbatten's illustrious career.

As Part 1 illustrates, Mountbatten (Nicol Williamson) would have a hard time fulfilling the Labour government's pledge to transfer power. Enmity between Muslims and Hindus had reached the boiling point, with Muslim League leader Muhammad Ali Jinnah (Vladek Sheybal) calling for India to be divided or be destroyed. At home, Winston Churchill (Malcolm Terris) was leading the Loyal Opposition in denouncing the government's plan.

Edwina: Janet Suzman. Nehru: Ian Richardson. Gandhi: Sam Dastor. Ismay: Nigel Davenport. Princess Victoria: Wendy Hiller. Attlee: John Rolfe. King George VI: Owen Holder. Brockman: Jeremy Sinden. (60 min.)

To Every Adult with a Weak Bladder Who Refuses to Wear Diapers:

Free trial of slim, trim Tranquility System with full purchase price refund by mail.

Designed for men and women with partial loss of bladder control who wish to carry on a normal socially active life. Standing, sitting, or participating in sports, the Tranquility Pad & Brief System is the best way to prevent the embarrassment of leakage, wet spots, odor.

At the heart of this system is its most effective pad with a unique moisture-locking center that disperses urine so rapidly that it can't puddle or flood. Deodorizes it. Locks in every drop it absorbs, so it can't leak.

Fits into a slim, trim brief that's just like regular underwear, but has a soft, moisture-proof panel for extra protection. Washable, of course. There's no demoralizing, bulky feel about Tranquility. It's natural-fit protection.

For Refund by Mail of Full Purchase Price of Tranquility Starter Kit, please send:

1. Both end flaps from Tranquility Starter Kit.
2. Cash register receipt with Tranquility purchase price circled.
3. This coupon.

Why Are We Offering These Nationally Advertised™ SWIFT-660/F™ Telescoping Spin Rods for only $5?

Hard to believe, but true.

These are the same SWIFT-660/F Telescoping WhisperCast WhamRods nationally advertised in leading media. A full standard 66 inches from base to tip, they spring to complete length in an eye-blinking 6/10ths of a second!...then telescope down to a mere 16 inches for easy storage in kit bag, glove compartment or attache case.

Crafted of aluminum, stainless steel and space-age fiberglass for extra strength and flexibility, they provide full response along the entire length of the rod, without "flat spots". And allow precise placement of small flies with a minimum of surface displacement.

Weighing a featherlight 3.75 ounces, they are ultralight for today's "compleat angler". Designed for casting over long distances, they're at home on virtually every lake, stream or waterway in America, and ideal for land-casting, general wading, and boat-fishing.

Each rod is covered by the company's full one-year money-back guarantee. Limit 2 per address, but if you mail your order within 30 days, you are allowed to request up to five. These Nationally Advertised SWIFT-660/F Telescoping WhisperCast WhamRods will not be sold at this price by the company in any store.

To order, mail this original printed ad (no copies or photostats) together with your name and address and $5 for each rod. Add only $2 shipping and handling no matter how many rods you are requesting. (New York residents add sales tax.) Allow up to 6-8 weeks for shipment. Make check payable to: E.M.P. Sales. Mail to: E.M.P. Sales FISHING ROD OFFER, Dept. 500-906, Box 400, Jericho, N.Y. 11753. (A29380)

EXTRA BONUS

If you are able to reply within the next 30 days, we'll offer the top-of-the-line SWIFT-660/F ZoomCast Spinning Reel with every rod you order ... for the astonishing price of just $2 a reel. (And we'll even wind 250 feet of our best 6-lb-test monofilament line onto each reel!)

These nationally advertised reels perfectly match your rod in weight and balance, and give you fast "thumbs-off" (one-handed) casting over longer distances than you ever dreamed possible. You can cast even light baits without backlash.

Compatible with virtually every plug or lure, the new high-speed gear ratio gives you fast "pop"-action, yet is powerful enough to reel in fish without "pumping". The new open-face design (and desirable skirted spool) eliminates friction and prevents tangles. The anti-reverse is "whisper" silent, and the Microdisc Surge-Free Drag System won't let your fish run away. This reel is yours for only $2 if you act within the next 30 days. (A25166)

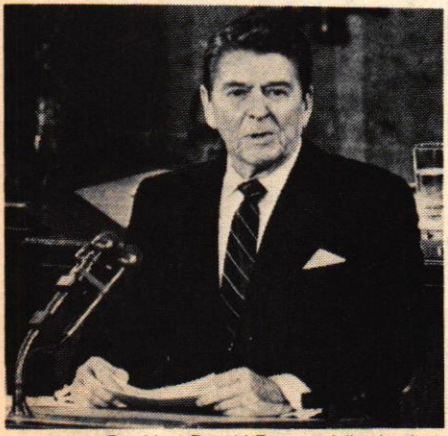
STATE OF THE UNION ADDRESS
9 PM ABC, CBS, CNN , NBC



President Ronald Reagan delivering last year's State of the Union address

President Ronald Reagan is scheduled to deliver his fifth State of the Union address before a joint session of Congress, telecast live from the House Chamber.

White House aides say that the President will depart from tradition this year and deliver a shorter, thematic speech. He will offer a pared-down list of priorities and eschew the usual recitation of past accomplishments.

A major part of the message will deal with the budget and spending cuts in light of the new budget-balancing law, which sets a deficit ceiling. Mr. Reagan is also expected to reiterate his opposition to a tax increase. In foreign policy, the Chief Executive is likely to focus on East-West relations in light of the Geneva Summit; the resolution of Third World conflicts; the need to deal with trade protectionism, with an eye toward the economic summit in May; the Middle East peace process; and what the U.S. can do to stop international terrorism.

[Analysis follows President Reagan's address on all the networks. In addition, it has become traditional for networks to make time available for a "Democratic Response" to the President's address by the Democratic National Committee.]

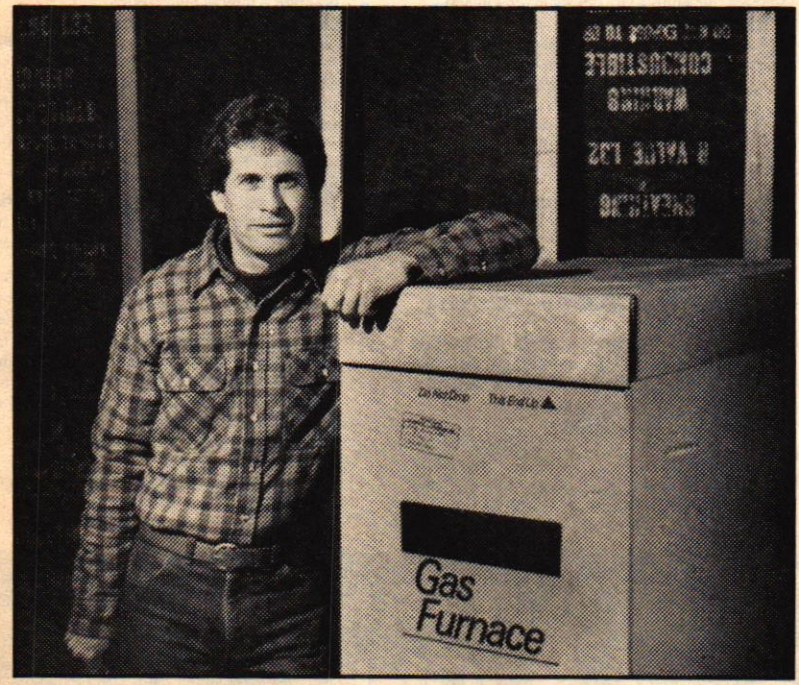
"TODAY'S SMART HOMEBUYERS LOOK FOR ENERGY EFFICIENCY...

THEY LOOK



Joe Mercurio

Joe Mercurio, Builder

Mark of Efficiency

FOR GAS."

"Natural gas offers people more of what they're looking for in an energy source—especially for heating, but also for hot water, cooking and clothes drying. Gas is economical, and today's gas equipment is the most energy-efficient ever. It's reliable, too. When buyers begin to compare my homes with someone else's, gas gives me a clear advantage. I build energy-efficient homes, and gas is part of that. I prefer to offer it—and families prefer to have it."

If you're looking for more energy efficiency for your home, look into the new gas heating systems and appliances. And see why builders like Joe Mercurio count on them to add value to their homes.

WINTER BLAHS GOT YOU DOWN?
Maybe the reason is medical.
Tonight we shed some light on a disorder that affects many of us.
abc TONIGHT 10:00 PM 4 33

Sponsor a Child for Only $10 a Month.

At last! Here is a $10 sponsorship program for Americans who are unable to send $16, $18, or $22 a month to help a needy child.

And yet, this is a full sponsorship program because for $10 a month you will receive:

- a 3½" × 5" photograph of the child you are helping.
- two personal letters from your child each year.
- a complete Sponsorship Kit with your child's case history and a special report about the country where your child lives.
- quarterly issues of our newsletter "Sponsorship News".

ALL THIS FOR ONLY $10 A MONTH?

Yes—because we searched for ways to reduce the cost—without reducing the help that goes to the child you sponsor.

For example, your child does not write each month, but two letters a year from your child keeps you in contact and, of course, you can write to the child just as often as you wish.

Also, to keep down costs, we do not offer the so-called "trial child" that the other organizations mail to prospective sponsors before the sponsors send any money.

YOU CAN MAKE THE DIFFERENCE!

$10 a month may not seem like much to you—but to a poor family living on an income of $2.00 a day, your sponsorship really helps!

Will you sponsor a child? Your $10 a month will help provide so much:

- emergency food, clothing and medical care.
- a chance to attend school.
- counseling for the child's family to help them become self-sufficient.

HERE IS HOW YOU CAN SPONSOR A CHILD:

1. Fill out the coupon and tell us if you want to sponsor a boy or a girl, and check the country of your choice.
2. Or mark the "emergency list" box and we will assign a child to you that most urgently needs to have a sponsor.
3. Send your $10 in right now and this will eliminate the cost of a "trial child."

Then, in just a few days you will receive your child's name, photograph, and case history.

May we hear from you? Our sponsorship program protects the dignity of the child and provides Americans with a beautiful way to help a youngster.

3-year-old Michelle was abandoned by her father. Soon after, her mother was forced to leave her in order to find work. She now lives with her grandmother in a hut with dirt floors and a grass roof.

asked if they'd watch Family Ties in various situations. These studies, plus Q scores, indicate that Family Ties could do solo duty, according to network research chief William Rubens. If Family Ties were moved, a new show like Valerie, with Valerie Harper, could be placed after Cosby and another, like Jack Klugman's new comedy, could be placed after Family Ties. Both new shows would then benefit from strong lead-ins—if the research is correct. —Richard Turner

Stoddard Impact Needs a Year

New ABC Entertainment chief Brandon Stoddard won't be able to put his stamp on the network's programming in a meaningful way until a year from now, according to network insiders. Though Stoddard has made strong statements about improving the quality of ABC's programs, he has cautioned that the changes will take time. Indeed, when he took over the programming helm last November, there was neither the time nor the budget to allow him to order pilots that were purely his own projects. The pilots being produced now to contend for spots on ABC's fall schedule were initiated during the previous regime, and Stoddard's "own" shows won't get on the air until the middle of the 1986-87 season. In the meantime, all he can do is influence casting decisions and the general tone of upcoming series. Perfect Strangers, for example, a comedy in development starring Bronson Pinchot and said to be a Stoddard favorite, will have some casting reconsidered. —R.T.

For Sins

Imagine Joan Collins Limiting Herself to a Mere 84 Costume Changes

As the producer as well as leading lady of the upcoming miniseries, the Dynasty star now has to fret about the budget as well as the script

By Lawrence Eisenberg

Sins is scheduled to air on CBS beginning Sunday, Feb. 2, from 8-11 P.M. (ET). It continues on Monday and Tuesday from 9-11 P.M. See local listings for time and channel in your area.

The Concorde has been used for expensive getaways, trysts, chic business meetings. Today, for perhaps the first time, it is being used as an umbrella. More than 20 people with motion-picture equipment huddle under its body, trying to avoid the monsoon rains at Charles de Gaulle Airport outside Paris.

Pulled up at the plane's ramp is a black Rolls-Royce whose female passenger seems almost an obligatory accessory: Joan Collins. Her cheeks have been dusted, her lips re-outlined for the 11th time. She turns to co-star Timothy Dalton, sitting next to her and says, "We've been in this car so long I feel like Marlon Brando and Rod Steiger in 'On the Waterfront'."

In the first half of this scene from Sins, the car had been filmed approaching the Concorde in a mild drizzle. Then the deluge came and now everybody has to wait until it ends so the rest of the scene can match.

After nearly an hour, during which another Concorde takes off for New York, the sky clears. Collins, in a red silk coat and matching beret, flounces out of the car, ascends the ramp imperiously and nods at the Air France stewardess in the doorway. When the scene is finished, Collins makes a victory sign, laughs and races down the ramp. She has good reason to be in a hurry: she has less than six weeks to complete this mammoth seven-hour miniseries before the start of production on Dynasty's 1985-86 season. [Reportedly unhappy with her Dynasty salary, Collins would linger in Europe, missing the filming of the season's first episode.—Ed.]

An hour later the company is in another part of the airport—and the century—shooting a scene set at Orly Airport in 1959. James Farentino, in an Army captain's uniform, is saying goodbye to Collins, who is wearing long hair to go with her hoop earrings, dark-green turtleneck and flat shoes. She is supposed to be 29. An extreme close-up might belie that, but from a few feet away this lithe, mincing little person seems even younger. As a newly arrived acquaintance looks at her in surprise, she laughs and says, "Didn't recognize me, huh?"

She moves in for a close-up with Farentino. They are supposed to be in love, having met a week earlier at a Paris fashion show. Now he has to leave for Vietnam as a U.S. adviser. They rehearse their farewell several times while, inside the terminal, a mob of fans watches through the glass.

Collins gets to her key moment. Standing on tiptoes, she puts her hands on Farentino's cheeks and seems about to cry. Then she pulls away, stares at the crowd and says, "I'm trying to look anguished and everybody back there is waving at me!" The mob is quickly moved out of → her sight. Instantly she stares soulfully at Farentino and her eyes tear up as though this is the most tragic moment of her life. She kisses him passionately.

In the days to come, there are other fleeting moments of tension: the following morning, the company is shooting in the dining room of a country estate in Vineuil St. Firmin, 50 kilometers from Paris (passing as the West Virginia home of Farentino and his mother, played by Faith Brook). Farentino is in a business suit and Brook is wearing a bright-red dress. Collins arrives on the set in a black dress whose top is dominated by a massive necklace of red stones. "Do you think this necklace is too much?" she asks. Everybody says no. Then she spots Brook's red dress, turns to director Douglas Hickox and producer Steve Krantz and says, "This is the third time this has happened and I think it's terrible!"

Asked why she is upset, she comments, "We said at the beginning of this picture that we were not going to have any of the actresses in the same scene wear the same color, which is what we do on Dynasty. The first shot Marisa [Berenson] and I did they had us both in red and we were a bit clashy. And I said we mustn't do that any more, and, as producer [she and her husband, Peter Holm, are the executive producers], I feel it's one of my jobs—and it's not just me. I wouldn't want to have Marisa and Lauren Hutton in a scene together in the same color. Today was the third time it happened and I said so."

Despite her objection, she goes on with the scene, stopping once to examine the table's place settings to make sure they are appropriate to this family and this house. Next, she must drink from a crystal goblet and announces, "This is filthy! I don't want to drink out of it!"

Director Hickox says, "She's quite right. A dirty glass shouldn't be on that table and she also knows you can cause quite a bit of damage to yourself from a dirty glass." (Collins herself tells of a time she was a guest on The Love Boat and refused to do a kissing scene because the actor involved had a cold sore and she was afraid it might be herpes.) "Joan is a perfectionist," Hickox continues. "Her appearance is precious to her. She's not a fool. If somebody is fussing that it might take Joan five minutes longer on her makeup, I always say, 'She's worth waiting for.' None of us would be here doing the picture unless she'd created that image for the audience."

Her co-stars are no less enthusiastic. "She's wonderfully good-humored and her energy is incredible," says Timothy Dalton. James Farentino, who spent a season playing a psychiatrist on Dynasty, says, "She's been up there and down there many times and I think this go-around she certainly cares more about her craft than she does about publicity."

On the set, she is considered the consummate professional. Of course, she makes the rules. One of them is that she must be free of distractions. Though she's used to being ogled, it bothers her when she is working. But the fact is that people tend to stare at Joan Collins. (The fascination with her outrageous Dynasty character seems to be unending.) When she finishes shooting the scene in the dining room, she changes clothes for a fast fashion-photo session on the lawn of the estate. Looking at the crowd that has → formed, she laughs and says, "Watch the monkey in the cage! Doesn't anybody have anything better to do except watch me take stills?"

She also insists on being comfortable. When her feet aren't shown on camera, she sashays around in gold bedroom slippers. At a studio outside Paris one day, where car interiors are being filmed, the trailers for co-stars Timothy Dalton and Judi Bowker are in the parking lot. Collins' is right on the sound stage and any time she gets more than 10 minutes between scenes she dashes to it, whips off her costume and puts on a robe. Then, surrounded by pictures of her children, she checks over photo contact sheets, approving some, killing others and answers the constantly chirping telephone. When she isn't smoking incessantly, she chews on plastic coffee stirrers in a futile attempt to cut down.

Culture shock doesn't even come close to describing one's reaction to this tiny woman in a pink terry robe, hair rollers and a run in her stocking, looking more like your Aunt Yetta than the mega-glamorous Alexis Dexter. She laughs and, in what seems like an Alexis parody, reclines sumptuously against a gaggle of throw pillows. "My theory," she says, "is never stand when you can sit and never sit when you can lie down—particularly when you're a producer . . . and an actress . . . a mother . . . everything."

This morning she'd gone to the trailer to wait while a film projector was being repaired. "I fell asleep," she says, "and I woke up, two hours later, alarmed. Two hours represent about $10,000. If I weren't a producer, I wouldn't be as concerned. Overtime is a killer and I've been very conscious of not going over budget on my wardrobe." (Viewers are assured that she does manage 84 changes of costume, including 36 outfits by Valentino.)

Collins became a producer at the insistence of Holm, whom she has known for three years. (They were married last October.) "A year ago he suggested I do it. He said, 'You've been in the business for 30 years. You can do it as well as anyone else can'."

They made a deal with New World Television, which asked them to consider "Sins." When she decided to do the show, the package was offered to CBS. "It wasn't 36 hours before we got the go-ahead to have the first draft written. I think it's the first time the network agreed to do a miniseries on the strength of a book and one actress, who was also producing. I was amazed." She shrugs. "But, in terms of television, I've proven that I get pretty good ratings, and that's why the network is willing to pay me . . . a nice chunk. And I can tell you [her voice goes straight up the scale], it's very ni-i-i-i-ce!"

Published by New American Library in 1982, "Sins," by Judith Gould, could be a primer on how to write a commercial novel/miniseries. Not one slick trick is omitted, even to the author's name. Syndicated columnist Liz Smith reported in the New York Daily News last May that Judith Gould is a pseudonym for two men—Rhea Gallaher Jr. and Nick Bienes—who were advised that novels sold better when the author was a Jewish female.

With a teleplay by Laurence Heath, Sins spans 42 years, beginning in Paris in 1943, when 13-year-old Helene Junot is raped and tortured by a Nazi, who also beats her mother to death and imprisons her brother and sister. The story covers Helene's rise from junior seamstress to Paris model to head of a billion-dollar fashion-publishing empire. Along the way are men for every occasion: an old count (Jean-Pierre Aumont); a young count (Neil Dickson); a no-account (Giancarlo Giannini); the Farentino character, who lets you know right at the beginning where he is headed. "Politics," he says, "is the family occupation." There is also a world-famous composer/conductor/pianist (Gene Kelly); the villain (Steven Berkoff), who out-Nazis anyone in recent fiction; a lecherous architect (Joseph Bologna); Helene's devoted brother (Timothy Dalton); and the obligatory Greek tycoon who gives wild parties on his yacht (this poor character—played here by Claude Vil- → lers—must be getting tired of being dragged from film to film, miniseries to miniseries).

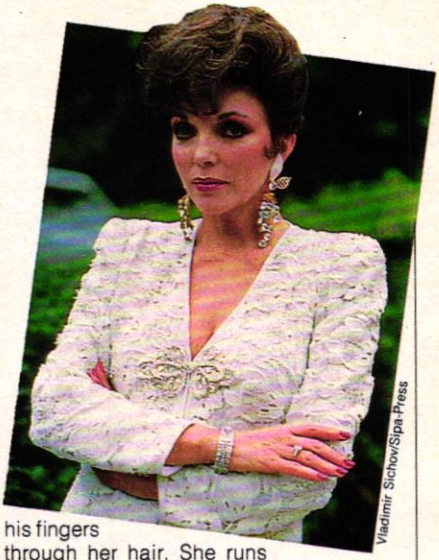
Sprawled lavishly across Paris, the French Riviera, Venice and New York, Sins has 122 speaking parts and is crammed with villas, architectural extravaganzas, limos, jewels, even a killer dog. Emotionally, it cuts a lot deeper than Dynasty, but, as though one needs a reminder that Joan Collins is not playing Alexis here, on her first date with Farentino at Maxim's he asks her whether she wants caviar. "I hate it," she replies.

"Dynasty seems like another life," says Collins, looking like splendor in the grass as she sprawls on the ground near a trout stream on the estate of the Farentino character. Wearing jeans, a shirt and a straw hat, she is resting between camera setups, and she looks gorgeous. It is pointed out that no matter what straits her character is in, she is rarely less than, well, elegant. One wonders whether she would ever play a backwoods woman.

"I don't think I could stretch myself facially in that way," she says. "I've played nurses and nuns, mission workers and secretaries, travel agents, mothers, certainly. But the public wouldn't buy me as Farrah Fawcett in 'The Burning Bed.' Besides, I don't like portraying women as victims. I like playing strong and assertive women. I don't like the character of Krystle. I think she's a wimp. . . ." She whispers, "I shouldn't have said that." Then she shrugs and says loudly, in the tone of a kid in a schoolyard, shouting defiantly at a rival, "I think Krystle is a wimp!" She falls back laughing.

Looking down into the stream, she spots some turtles and wonders whether she can get one in a jam jar to take back to her 13-year-old daughter, Katy, at the hotel. (A visitor has commented to her, "You're a very good mother." Collins' answer: "Sh, it's bad for my image.")

Filming is resumed and she and Farentino are about to do a love scene. They begin ad-libbing gestures and testing movements until they are comfortable with the scene. She touches his arms and he moves his hand down her back, then rakes his fingers through her hair. She runs hers along his neck, looking as though she's never known anybody else in her life. The crew is fascinated by this improvisational work and, after the stars have kissed soulfully again and again, and Hickox has wrapped the scene, they applaud.



Vladimir Sichov/Sipa Press

Collins leaps up happily. Today, May 23, is her birthday and, at the lunch break, Steve Krantz presents her with a gift from the company—a silver cigarette box. "I may have to start smoking again," she says. (She actually had not stopped.) Now everybody sings "Happy Birthday" in French. "Oh, you sound so beautiful," she says, her eyes almost misty.

"I've always loved birthdays," she says later. "I love surprises and I love getting flowers and cards and telegrams." She has no philosophical thoughts on her birthday, she says. "I'm not a tremendously philosophical person, actually. I don't spend a great deal of time ruminating on the past regretfully or even thinking a great deal about the future. I try to live totally in the present, living every moment as a wonderful moment that will never occur again."

She is asked how old she is today. "Fifty-two," she says. With a mock-seductive look she adds, "But you can say 42." The giggle is one that Alexis wouldn't understand. END

'I have been right in everything I have done and said in my life'

Audacious and charming, Lord Mountbatten never lacked for confidence—or enemies—in his distinguished career as a naval officer and diplomat

By Geoffrey C. Ward

PBS's Masterpiece Theatre will begin a six-part series, Lord Mountbatten: The Last Viceroy, on Sunday, Jan. 26, at 9 P.M. (ET). Check listings for time and channel in your area.

"The position having become impossible, they call upon Dickie," said Noel Coward when he heard in March 1947 that his old friend, Lord Louis Mountbatten, had been asked to go to India as Britain's last Viceroy, with orders to end two centuries of British rule by June of the following year.

Certainly it was not an enviable task. Mohandas Gandhi's old dream of a free and united India, for which he and the Indian National Congress had struggled for 50 years, was dying. It had been undercut by the Moslem League and its implacable leader, Mohammad Ali Jinnah, who demanded that the subcontinent's 90 million Moslems be awarded a nation of their own, to be called Pakistan or "Land of the Pure." Thousands of Moslems and Hindus had already died in rioting over the issue; more were dying every day, and the weary Raj, the British administration, seemed powerless to stop it. Nonetheless, the new Labor Party government of Clement Attlee was determined to rid Britain of its Indian empire—over the angry objections of such Tories as Winston Churchill, who dismissed Labor's plans as "Operation Scuttle."

Nor did Mountbatten seem a logical choice for the task. He was a member of the royal family for one thing, second cousin to the King, George VI, and a favorite great-grandson of Queen Victoria. She was said to have been amused even when he knocked off her spectacles while she held him at his christening in 1900. Members of the royal family traditionally remain above political controversy.

"You do know that the job is almost impossible," Mountbatten told the King before he agreed to go to India.

"It can be done," said George VI.

"Only by a miracle. And look how bad it will be for you and the family if I fail."

"Ah," said the King, "but look how good if you succeed."

Then, too, Mountbatten was a sailor, not a diplomat. The Indian assignment would only interrupt his progress toward his lifelong goal—to become First Sea Lord, the British Navy's top job from which his father, Prince Louis of Battenberg, had unjustly been forced to resign during World War I because of his German birth. Mountbatten's years at sea had earned him a mixed reputation. Admirers spoke of his dash, audacity and courage. His gallantry in staying with his destroyer, HMS Kelly, until it sank under German bombs won him a D.S.O. and inspired Noel Coward's film "In Which We Serve." He was made Supreme Allied Commander South East Asia at the age of 43, empowered to conduct the campaign that eventually wrested Burma back from Japan and then to restore stability to the vast region that stretched from French

Indochina to India's eastern border.

Along the way he made a good many enemies. They thought him too handsome, too ambitious, too eager to please. They resented and mistrusted his royal connections and his Hollywood friends; made fun of his nickname and ridiculed his staff as "Dickie birds"; and gossiped about his curious marriage to the glamorous Edwina Ashley, whose many extramarital affairs Mountbatten seems tacitly to have approved. (She rarely interfered with his romances, either, and they remained fond of one another through it all.) With characteristic bluntness, the American general Joseph Stilwell summarized the feelings of Mountbatten's critics: Lord Louis, he wrote, was "a Glamour Boy [who] doesn't wear well."

Still, once Mountbatten took on a job it rarely occurred to him that he might fail: "Sir," he once said to Churchill, "I have a congenital weakness for feeling certain I can do anything." His self-confidence was breathtaking: "It is a curious thing, but a fact," he told one would-be biographer, "that I have been right in everything I have done and said in my life." So was his breezy ability to rewrite history to suit himself. Even his able and admiring official biographer, Philip Ziegler, would find it necessary to pin a cautionary sign above the desk on which he labored to disentangle the truth from Mountbatten's gaudy version of it: "REMEMBER," it read, "IN SPITE OF EVERYTHING, HE WAS A GREAT MAN."

That seems undeniable: his self-confidence and natural buoyancy enabled him to make swift, sure decisions. His great energy and chronic impatience coupled with a magnetism that one enemy admitted "could charm a vulture off a corpse" insured that they were implemented without delay. "He was such a sweet man," former prime minister Harold Macmillan recalled. "He was slightly childish. . . . He boasted a lot. But that didn't matter. . . . What did matter was that he was a charming character."

The transfer of power in India would test all his attributes. For sheer grandeur the life the Mountbattens led in the Viceroy's palace in New Delhi surpassed anything his cousin had experienced in Buckingham Palace; there were 7000 people in the servants' quarters, including one man whose sole job it was to pluck chickens. Mountbatten delighted in ritual—"I suppose I've always been a bit of a showman," he once confessed—and he rarely passed up a chance to display himself in his blinding white uniform blanketed with medals. But he never stood on ceremony; the new Viceroy and his wife appalled old India hands by arriving unannounced at parties held in the homes of nationalist leaders who had spent their adult lives working to overthrow British rule. "I want you to regard me not as the last Viceroy winding up the British →

Raj," he told Jawaharlal Nehru, the Cambridge-educated Congress leader who would become India's first prime minister, "but the first to lead you to a new India." Nehru, who had spent nine years in British jails, was impressed: "Now," he said, "I know what they mean when they speak of your charm being so dangerous." Lady Mountbatten's charm worked on Nehru, too; in fact, she and the prime minister eventually became lovers, again with no apparent objection from Mountbatten.

Gandhi also took to the viceroyal couple, calling them "my dear friends." But Jinnah remained impervious. "My God, he was cold," Mountbatten told an aide after his first meeting with the Moslem leader, and there was never to be a thaw. Jinnah was immovable: there would be Pakistan or there would be chaos. In the end, there was both.

After weeks of frustrating debate—and still more killing—Mountbatten concluded that no compromise was possible: "It was more important to be quick than to have an undivided India," he wrote. "Government was losing control!" Reluctantly, Nehru and the Congress bowed to the inevitability of Pakistan; both new nations would remain within the British Commonwealth. Gandhi's anguished protest over what he called "the vivisection of India" was gently ignored.

Then, on June 4, Mountbatten stunned even his closest aides by announcing that Britain would withdraw not in a year, as planned, but in just 10 weeks—on Aug. 15, 1947. Everything was accelerated. A British barrister was imported and given a little over a month to carve up a subcontinent he had never seen before. The Indian army was parceled out between the new Dominions; so were bank assets and railway rolling stock and files and typewriters and paper clips. All but three of India's 565 independent princes were persuaded to join one or the other Dominion. (The laggards were later pressured into joining India.) Mountbatten presided over all of it from his New Delhi headquarters—cajoling, threatening, trying with little success to calm the communal warfare. Behind him on his office wall hung an oversized calendar, each big sheet boldly marked with the number of days left before power passed into Indian and Pakistani hands.

Historians still differ as to whether a more gradual approach would have reduced or increased the horror that accompanied Indian independence. Fourteen million people were torn from their homes; Hindus and Sikhs struggling toward India; Moslems hurrying to Pakistan. It was one of the greatest migrations in history and no one knows how many were butchered along the way; estimates range above half a million. "My country has gone mad!" Nehru said, but Mountbatten never doubted he had done the right thing; he greeted Independence Day, he wrote, "with completely undiluted pleasure," and he was pleased to accept India's invitation to stay on for 10 months as governor-general.

Mountbatten returned to the navy in 1948, and in 1955 was appointed at last to his father's old post as First Sea Lord. "Thrill to sit under Papa's picture," he noted in his diary on his first day in office; he was 54 years old. Lady Mountbatten died in 1960, and he retired from public service five years later, but his exalted sense of himself never deserted him. He planned and starred in his own autobiographical television series, The Life and Times of Lord Mountbatten, comforting himself whenever he muffed his lines with the thought that "I am told this can happen to the greatest film stars!" And he meticulously planned his own state funeral, down to the details of two luncheon menus, one for summer, one for winter, that were to be served to guests traveling aboard the train to his interment at Broadlands, his country home. In the event, the summer menu was served, for on Aug. 29, 1979, Lord Mountbatten became the victim of the kind of sectarian madness he had been helpless to stop in India, murdered by an IRA bomb while sailing off the Irish coast. FRAGGLE ROCK

The Fraggles, as anyone who subscribes to HBO knows, live in the rock under Doc's house. The Doozers are there, too, working away like mad on their delicious towers, and just outside are the outsize Gorgs. Not very nice creatures, the Gorgs—especially Pa Gorg—but they're not too bright, either, so while they may cause some concern every so often, you can be sure the Fraggles will outwit them every time.

Then there's Sprocket, Doc's dog, who has to keep reminding him of things because Doc gets awfully absent-minded when he's working on his complicated scientific problems, like how to sew a button on a fried egg.

There should be a warning about now. Fraggle Rock is addictive. Parents who watch with their children at 7:30 P.M. (ET) on Mondays are warned that they'll soon be as involved as their youngsters in the frantic activity under Doc's house and in the music that's part of each half-hour episode. And we know a successful interior designer well past the age of consent who would rather mix purple polka dots and cerise stripes than miss a Fraggle Rock show.

Consider the implications. Doc is writing in his diary up there in his house and down below Mokey is writing in hers, telling us how sorry she feels for the Doozers who work so hard to construct towers only to have the Fraggles eat whatever the Doozers build. She decides to invoke the oath of the Fraggles, and has Convincing John persuade everyone to take an oath promising not to eat any more Doozer constructions. Convincing John (aided by his girl singers) soon leads everyone in a rousing musical endorsement of the oath and every Fraggle—there are scores of them—takes the pledge. When some time later Gobo and Boober (he's the one whose favorite pastime is watching laundry dry) are sorely tempted, Mokey catches them and straightens them out. But guess what—with no one eating what they build, the Doozers soon have the Rock so jammed with towers that the Fraggles can hardly get around and the poor Doozers haven't room to build any more and we learn that if they can't build they die and that means they've got to move away so rather than have that happen Mokey rescinds the oath and that prompts Convincing John to lead another chorus of his song. Then, just as the unhappy Doozers are leaving with all their construction equipment, the Fraggles start eating towers and the Doozers return.

Concludes Mokey in her diary: "It's not easy to understand other people's problems but it's very easy to think you do."

Fraggle Rock is charming, it's entertaining, it's visually attractive and it's nonviolent. The program is imaginative and upbeat. Best of all, it's a welcome change from the cartoons—and commercials—that fill most of the time television sets aside for children. No wonder it has won so many endorsements and awards from groups interested in excellent television shows for young people. Consider this at least three more cheers for Jim Henson and his supremely talented crew of magic-makers—and HBO—for Fraggle Rock. (END)
